Cordially invites you to participate at Roundtable Discussion on

Climate change finance policy packages and water security: A case of Southern Africa

Challenges of water security amongst many other issues, continue to impede the process of development in Southern Africa. In the last decade, the region has received very little to no rainfall in most parts resulting in devastating drought effects. The effects of climate change evidently continue to intensify the rate and level of extremes such as drought across the region, for the many people who have always grappled with issues of water quantity; availability, reliability; and quality.
